License revocations for immoral conduct offenses spiked following scrutiny from WISGOP

[Madison, WI] — Last fall, Tony Evers' failure to remove a teacher from the classroom spreading pornography and making sexually explicit comments about children became a major issue in the race for governor. Now, records show that when under scrutiny for his failures, Evers' agency engaged in a cover-up – revoking more licenses in September than at any other point during his tenure. The Republican Party of Wisconsin released the following statement on Evers' attempt to cover up his agency's failures in order to save his political ambitions:

"Tony Evers refused to take action when it was time to protect children, but he moved pretty quickly when his political career was in danger," spokesman Alec Zimmerman said. "This is a cover-up, plain and simple, but it won't erase the fact that Evers has a long career of inaction and mismanagement at his agency – Wisconsin families simply can't trust Madison bureaucrat Tony Evers to protect them."
