Fit for the Fight: Stewart Files Nomination Papers for 48th Assembly District

(Madison) Announcing that he is fit for the fight, 48th Assembly District candidate Walt Stewart filed his nomination papers yesterday with the Wisconsin Elections Commission at their temporary location at UW's Union South.

“Especially during these difficult times, that more than 300 residents signed my nomination papers demonstrates the breadth of support throughout the district for my candidacy,” Stewart commented.

Stewart will bring his experience that works to make sure that there is adequate funding for front line responders, that we protect the most vulnerable among us and those who care for them, that we protect our lakes, and increase support for education.

“Solving the current threat from PFAS pollution in our lakes is a top priority. And every parent with school or college age children who has had to deal with the challenges of online learning has first-hand knowledge of the need for increased support for our educational system from pre-K through higher education.

“COVID-19 has laid bare for everyone to see that the current Republican party leadership has undermined the ability for our state to respond to serious problems in all these areas, and most especially for people on the front lines of this epidemic,” stated Stewart.

“We deserve a State Representative with established roots and work experience in the district as well as experience in the legislature who will fight for what’s needed by the people of the north and east sides of Madison,” stated Stewart. “I’m fit for the fight.”
